Five Insights to take with you from...

Keep Learning and Know Your “Why” with Erin Holmes

Communication is the key to building relationships with administrators, and it’s time well spent - most teachers spend more time speaking than listening to administrators - be one who listens.

Even if others seem like they don’t support or understand music education, don’t assume that - instead, assume they care, and tell them about your “why.”

Consider having a conversation rather than sending an email. Ask permission to call for people who need time to process messages.

Know your “why” - have an answer to the question “what is the value of what you are doing?”

The essence of leadership can be vulnerability - show others that your own work is never-ending.

Every day is a good day to get better.
